L-3 COMMUNICATIONS MAS AWARDED CDN $39 MILLION (US $34 MILLION) CANADIAN DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE PROJECT BY BOEING
- Award for Second Phase of Avionics Upgrade for 78 Cf-18 Aircraft -

NEW YORK, NY, February 1, 2006 - L-3 Communications (NYSE: LLL) announced today that its Canadian subsidiary MAS (L-3 MAS) has been awarded a CDN $39 million (US $34 million) contract by Boeing for the second phase of a project to upgrade 78 CF-18 aircraft for Canada's Department of National Defence (DND).

The two-phased modernization project, which began in April 2001, will bring the Canadian Air Force fleet of CF-18 Hornets into full interoperability with the equipment of key allies and extend the life of the aircraft through 2017. The project includes modernizing specifications of newer models through an avionics configuration upgrade program. This approach allows the Canadian Forces uninterrupted access to and use of its CF-18 fleet.

Phase two will add a data link system, a helmet-mounted sight system, new cockpit displays and a new flare-dispensing electronic warfare system to the Hornet aircraft. Much of this work will be conducted at the L-3 MAS facility in Mirabel.

Phase one equipped the CF-18s with improved communication and navigation capabilities. Upgrades included new mission computers and radios for communications purposes, an APG-73 radar system that is compatible with NATO-ally air forces, a stores management system for weapon-system and associated-equipment control, and a combined interrogator/transponder system that ensures allies recognize Canadian CF-18 aircraft as "friendlies."

"These upgrades represent a cost-effective way for Canada to sustain very effective combat aircraft capabilities into the 21st century," said Mr. Sylvain Bédard, president of L-3 MAS. "We feel the combination of L-3
